BUFFALO, N. Y., Mar. 24.—Henri Marchand, artist and sculptor of international renown, steeled himself today for the ordeal he must go through when he is summoned to the stand this week at the trial of Lila Jimerson, his dark-eyed Indian paramour who is charged with the murder of his wife.

The gray-haired, distinguished-looking painter of Indian pictures, will be a "key" witness in this strange case. He will be called chiefly for the purpose of establishing the motive of the crime. And inasmuch as the finger of suspicion has been pointed at him, his testimony will be closely scrutinized.

District Attorney Guy B. Moore, asserts that Lila plotted the slaying of Mrs. Clothilde Marchand, the artist's wife, because she believed that Marchand, who had made love to her when she posed for him, would some day marry her. Mrs. Marchand was beaten to death in her home by Nancy Bowen, a superstitious sixty-six year old Indian woman, on March 6th under circumstances still shrouded in mystery. Nancy was a friend of Lila's and was taken to the Marchand home by Lila. She was Lila's dupe, according to the state.

Marchand, when he takes the stand, probably will be asked:

1. Did you have any knowledge that Miss Jimerson and Nancy Bowen had been plotting for weeks to kill your wife?

2. Did you ever suggest to Lila that you would marry her if you were free to do so?

3. What was the nature of the conversation you had with Lila when you were automobile riding with her immediately after your wife was slain?

PRESBYTERIANS BREAK ANNUAL CANVASS RECORD

A Total of $5895 Pledged For Church Support; $1154.60
For Benevolences

SUPPER FOR COMMITTEE

All records were broken yesterday in the financial canvass of the Bristol Presbyterian Church when a total of $5895 was pledged for church support and $1154.60 was pledged for benevolences.

The borough was divided into 16 districts and there were 13 teams of two men each and three teams of three men each named for the canvass. The teams made 262 visitations between the hours of 3 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon.

The estimated budget was $5500 for church support and $1000 for benevolences and the amount of money pledged in both instances went over the estimates.

Thirty-five men did the soliciting and two men remained at the church tabulating the reports.

In 1929 there was $4556.40 pledged for church support and in 1928 the amount was $5494.90.

The amount pledged this year is the largest ever pledged and the solicitors have the fewest number of calls uncompleted. The amount $5895 does not include any estimated amounts but gives the actual total pledged. In cases where the member was not at home no estimate was made as to what he or she will contribute. In other years such individuals were also estimated to give the same as the previous year. Such pledges as these are not represented in this year's total.

The committee having the affair in charge consisted of the following:

Russell B. Carly, chairman; Herbert A. Pettit, secretary; William B. Dalton, Eli M. Peck, George F. Zarr, Dr. John J. Hargrave, Dr. Charles H. Peet, George Ardrey, Thomas S. Harper, Ralph Scheffey, William H. Arensmyer, J. B. Johnson.

A supper was served the canvassers by the wives of the committee.

BUCKS COUNTY DIVING HORSE AND INSTRUCTOR

TRAINING IS GRADUAL

Steeds Like Their Summer
Work — Loaf All Winter and Live to Be 30 or 40

High-diving horses lead the "life of Reilly," but it is somewhat "rough" on their riders.

These trained steeds, which dive from a 45-foot platform into eleven feet of water, can look forward to an easeful life and a long one—in most cases about three times the lifespan of the average horse—while their riders, aside from the thrills, can expect a large allotment of broken bones.

A training school for diving horses has come out of the West and located near Shelly Station, three miles north of Quakertown, Bucks county. This Pennsylvania "western ranch," a ten-acre tract, is the home of A. Floyd Carver and Lorena Carver, children of the late W. F. ("Doc") Carver, world's champion rifle shot, partner of "Buffalo Bill" Cody and one of the last of the swashbuckling western plainsmen, who died in California two years ago at the age of eighty-seven.

The training, which makes a diver out of a horse in two years, is the job of "Al" Carver. His sister is the rider.

"I tried to ride in the dive a couple of times," he grinned. "The second time the horse somersaulted and landed on top of me in the water, and ever since then I've been merely training. Lorena likes the riding job and she can have it. She's got plenty of nerve for it, too."

Lorena Carver, an attractive bobbed-haired young woman, rode her first diving horse when she was eleven and hasn't missed a summer since, though it has resulted in a total of twenty-eight bone fractures and numerous cuts and bruises for her.

One of Miss Carver's choice winter sports, incidentally, is rolling about in the snow, clad only in a bathing suit.

"Snow bathing keeps me in trim, and it's lots of fun besides," she explained. "But the horses are important work. Their training is an art at which Al is a master."

Patience is the main ingredient in teaching horses to dive, according to Carver.

"It's the most interesting job in the world, I think," he said. "Selection of horses is most important, for only about one in fifty can ever be taught the trick. Most diving horses are full-blooded white Arabians, noted for their strength, speed and beauty for centuries. Some have a mixture of the Morgan strain in them."

"We prefer what we call 'close-coupled chunks,' that is, horses that do not have long necks or long backs."

The trained diving horses seem to like their occupation. They dive all summer, one or two performances a day as a rule, and loaf all winter.

"They live a long, happy life," Carver said. "In the first place, they are picked horses; and they get the best of care. One of ours was thirty-eight when he died and he did his act up to the last."

When the horse is about three years old he gets his first diving lesson, starting with a tower only six feet above the water's surface. A rope is tied to his halter, the trainer standing at the opposite end, across the tank from the horse.

Down He Goes!

"Then," Carver said, "we lead him gently to the edge of the platform, clucking encouragingly to him. Finally he gets up enough courage to jump off. And before he changes his mind we lead him back for another jump."

This is repeated only a few times a day. After a few weeks we raise the platform to fifteen feet, and get the horse acquainted with that height. "In the early stages of the training he dives without a rider. But at the fifteen-foot height Lorena climbs on, and, still using the lead rope, we get him to jump without a rider. At the fifteen-foot height Lorena climbs on, and, still using the lead rope, we get

Mar. 24.—(INS)—The Europa, new glantess of the seas, having passed the half-way mark in her maiden trans-Atlantic voyage, was maintaining a speed of close to 28 knots early today, and her passengers and crew were hoping for good weather and a new crossing record.

At the last official announcement of the log, the Europa was slightly ahead of the record made for the same distance by her sister ship, the Bremen. While no effort was being made to push the big liner, she was permitted to "have her head," and if clear skies and calm seas prevail throughout today and night she may make Ambrose Lightship early tomorrow.

MELLON ENJOYING TENTH YEAR IN CABINET AS SEVENTY-FIFTH BIRTHDAY DRAWS NEAR

By Robert S. Thornburgh

I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, Mar. 24.—In his tenth year as secretary of the treasury, Andrew W. Mellon is celebrating his seventy-fifth birthday today.

Already Mr. Mellon has the distinction of being the only man who served in this high financial post under three presidents. Appointed by President Harding, March 4, 1921, he continued under President Coolidge and was re-appointed by President Hoover.

In length of service, however, Mellon so far is exceeded by Albert Gallatin, the secretary under Presidents Jefferson and Madison, who held office from May, 1801, to April, 1813. Gallatin like Mellon was from Pennsylvania. If Mellon serves out the Hoover term he will have equalled the record of Albert Gallatin.

As his seventy-fifth birthday approaches Mellon has indicated no intention of retiring from the Hoover cabinet. At the beginning of the administration it appeared likely that Mellon would serve no more than a year and then, with most of the projects which he had inaugurated in the reconstruction period either completed or underway, he would retire to private life. Sometime ago, however, the White House issued a statement that Mellon would remain throughout the administration.

Mellon has had an extremely busy year since his last birthday. Among its outstanding events, so far as the Treasury was concerned, was the recommendation for a one per cent reduction in the normal tax rates on individuals and corporations, which for 1929 incomes reduced the country's tax burden by $160,000,000.

Early in the year Mellon, as ex-officio chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, along with the rest of the administration became exercised over the oryx of stock speculation, fearing its effect on industry and commerce. As a result, the board with Mellon's approval took radical steps, both through heavy increases in the Federal Reserve rediscount rates, and through public statements, to divert capital from speculative to productive business channels. Subsequent events—the sensational rise in prices, followed by the dramatic crash in the market in October and November—proved the soundness of Mellon's position.

Another trying situation for Mr. Mellon and his subordinates during the last year has been the enforcement of the prohibition and customs laws. In 1929 came the unfortunate epidemic of killings by customs, prohibition and Coast Guardsmen which aroused national indignation. "Shotgun enforcement" was roundly criticized in congress and elsewhere.

Mellon approved the plan to transfer the Prohibition Bureau from the Treasury to the Justice Department, feeling that this phase of law enforcement rightly belonged under the attorney-general. Legislation is now pending to that end.

The unofficial part played by the U. S. Government in the drafting of the new European reparations plan, and the organization of the new bank of International Settlements, likewise was of vital concern to Secretary Mellon. The American representatives who unofficially participated in the parleys at Paris, including Owen D. Young and J. P. Morgan, conferred at the Treasury before going abroad. The Federal Reserve Board permitted the resignation of Gates W. McGarragh, chairman of the board of the New York reserve bank, to become head of the International institution.

Mellon, along with the rest of the government, reiterated frequently that the International Bank was not linked with the United States. Nevertheless, the close connection is obvious—the bank was conceived by Americans, close to the Administration, and will be directed by a man who was the Reserve Board's official representative in the New York district.

During Mellon's term as secretary there have been many important fiscal reforms and accomplishments. Income taxes which were at a maximum of close to seventy per cent have been reduced to a maximum of 25 per cent for the highest brackets, although the government is collecting far more on the low rates. For the current year the majority of the taxpayers contribute less than 1/2 of one per cent to the Treasury.

Mellon, as chairman of the World War Debt Funding Commission, brought about a settlement of the War Debts, funded over sixty-two year period Russia's debt alone remains unsettled.

An enormous building program has been launched during the Mellon regime, and many other changes made of lesser, although vital importance.

Friends of the secretary say that he has enjoyed thoroughly his years at the head of the Treasury Department. It virtually was his first public office. Mellon for years having been the president of the Mellon National Bank of Pittsburgh, and as such had little contact with the general public.

Paintings and Works of Art

AN INSTRUCTIVE DAY

A trip to the new art museum, Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, planned by Mrs. Ernest Lawrence, was much enjoyed by 32 members of the Bristol Travel Club on Friday.

Arriving at the museum at 10 a. m., the Bristol women were taken through the large building and had the various finished portions explained to them by Stewart Dick, one of the museum lecturers.

The finished portion of the museum comprises the English and American sections. To approach this section the Travel Club members were led through galleries devoted to the arts of Italy, France, and the low countries. In each of these galleries are to be found paintings, works of sculpture, furniture, tapestries, gold and silver-smithing products, etc.

In the completed portion of the museum are found whole rooms with their original architectural background, and with works of art and old furnishings, showing the periods represented.

The English galleries show six notable English rooms of different epochs: A room from Tower Hill, London, about 1765, furniture being in the Chippendale style; an oak room from Sutton Scardale, about 1724, furnished with Queen Anne and Georgian walnut pieces; and four other rooms equally as pleasing. Included is the Deal room from Wroughton Hall, about 1748. The furniture in this room is of the Chippendale period.

In the series of American rooms are found: A hall from the house of the miller, Millbach, Pa., about the year 1752. This room represents primitive architecture of Pennsylvania. There furniture is characteristic of the Pennsylvania Germans. A drawing room from the Powell House, Philadelphia, 1768, is one greatly to be admired. This represents the best in Colonial art, just prior to the Revolution, and is regarded as one of the finest of all the American rooms. The furniture is Philadelphia mahogany from the Chippendale period. It is known that Washington on frequent occasions visited at the Powell house.

BRISTOL MAN IS CAUGHT IN AUTO CONTAINING BOOZE

Michael Delato, 26, of 364
Lafayette Street, Taken

100 GALLONS IN CAR

Now Being Held With Morrisville Resident by New Jersey Police

TRENTON, N. J., Mar. 24.—Two men were arrested and 21 five-gallon cans of alleged alcohol were seized just before daybreak today when Officer Simpson, of Hamilton Township, stopped a sedan on Greenwood avenue near the city line.

The names given by the pair occupying the car are Joseph Pepe, 21 years old, who said he is employed on the Starkey Farms, near Morrisville, and Michael Delato, 26 years old, who gave his address as 364 Lafayette street, Bristol.

Both are being held at the Hamilton Township police headquarters on a charge of unlawfully transporting alcohol. Pepe and Delato denied ownership and declared they were not aware of the cargo's ultimate destination.

The automobile aroused Officer Simpson's curiosity because of the bulky cargo heaped in the rear of the vehicle. The cans had been piled compactly into the space and the seat cushion thrown on top. The car bore Pennsylvania registration.

The seizure was the second discovery of contraband by the township authorities within 24 hours. Visiting the house on Paterson avenue, Olden Avenue Gardens, where a huge still was seized last Sunday, police officials found another giant plant in full blast. Federal dry agents are expected here today to supervise the demolition of the plant and to assist in the investigation.

The property was deserted yesterday when Chief Brettle and Captain Brown appeared. During the raid on the previous Sunday Frank Warrane, of 214 North Clinton avenue, was found on the premises, but he refused to discuss the ownership of the place.

Yesterday 50,000 gallons of mash were discovered and 15 five-gallon cans of alcohol in addition to the still. The previous week a 200-gallon still was in operation, with 60,000 gallons of mash.

THIRTY-SECOND MEALS

Pneumonia, rheumatism, arthritis and related diseases are being treated by a type of diathermic electrical apparatus. It develops an intense internal heat, and some one not long ago conceived the idea that it might also prove useful in cooking. Tests were arranged, and it developed that diathermic electrical heat could bake a potato in 60 seconds, roast a steak in 30 seconds, and fry an egg in two seconds. Further experimentation is under way in the hope that a system can be devised which will reduce considerably the time now consumed in preparing a meal.

Those who have watched an able cook work lovingly and leisurely in the preparation of a tasty dish will shudder at the mere thought of a three-minute meal. What has the world come to that gastronomic satisfaction no longer is considered worthy of effort? What pleasure would there be in the most appetizing dish if those partaking of it knew it was prepared in a few seconds? What satisfaction would a talented cook gain from preparing a choice viand if he had to admit it represented but ten seconds of effort? That is putting the noble art of cooking in a class with mesmerism.

The world has little need of three-minute dinners. It does need a return to the old days in which cooking was an art, and when food preparation was a matter of days rather than hours. Though modern kitchenette wives pray for foods that can be prepared in less time than it takes to boil a four-minute egg, their dyspeptic husbands moan and hope for a return to that brand of cookery that made kitchen slaves of housewives and healthy stomachs and good appetites for their husbands.

ON BEING USEFUL

Men and women who sow the seed of constant useful activity reap the harvest of success from a soil fertilized by their own steady purpose. It would be as foolish to expect success without active exertion as to gather a crop before you plant the seed. But in cultivating that character which reaps true achievement you may sow in all seasons and gather fruit with the serene assurance that even wind and weather—storm and stress—are a part of the process of personal growth.

Optimism is an ally of effort and success. It is the kernel of the nut, not the shell. It is the fine trait of the man, not the fanfare. It is the flowers on the hillside, not the dead leaves under the snow. It is the opportunity in any job, not the grind. It is up to the individual whether his world will be golden or drab. Optimism in a world is the eye of the soul. It is the color in the vision revealing the fine beyond the coarse, the best beyond the worst.

Any town is a rotten town to a man whose name doesn't mean anything on a dotted line.

'GENERAL CRACK' BY GEORGE PREEDY

Copyright 1928 by Dodd Mead & Co., Inc.
The Warner Bros. & Vitaphone production starring John Barrymore, is based on this novel.

SYNOPSIS

General Crack as head of the Imperial army of King Leopold, has succeeded in vanquishing the enemy, and lays his plans for the coronation of Leopold as Emperor. The price of his siding with the King was the hand of Princess Eleonora whom Leopold had intended to marry. Gabor, a knight dismissed from Crack's service for treachery, forges a letter from Eleonora to Leopold protesting love and urges on the latter a liaison. Leopold is tempted, both by love of Eleonora and hatred of Crack.

"No! Of course he has not gone, either to Dresden or to Berlin. I have kept a watch upon his movements," continued Gabor, "as you directed me. He was closeted with the Elector of Saxony for about half an hour this morning; they left the city together, but they did not long keep company. Leopold was without his uniform, and in a plain attire that amounted to a disguise. He appeared alike careless of his reputation and the consequences of his action."

Count Hensdorff came to a pause on the cobble pavement.

"But where has he gone?" he whispered, desperately. "Where the devil has the man gone to?"

"You do well to mention the devil," replied Gabor, smiling with pale lips, "for his hand is certainly in this! Leopold has gone, I dare swear, to Rosenberg."

"God in heaven!" exclaimed Hensdorff.

Gabor laughed under his breath. "Rosenberg is very near Ottenheim," he muttered, "and the Princess Eleonora seems a magnet to some men."

"I must after the accused foot at once!" exclaimed Hensdorff, vigorously. "But he has nearly a day's start. Somehow I thought of this myself—and yet dared not! I might have known—"

But Gabor had not intended that he should know, until the Emperor had got that same good start of many hours' riding.

"Leave me now," muttered Hensdorff, desperate, yet thinking of the passers-by, for both townsmen and soldiers were passing through the Grande Place; "and if you breathe a single syllable of your suspicions, Gabor—" he paused, with a look of the utmost menace, and Gabor, for once in his life, spoke the utter truth when he replied:

"I can promise you that I will speak them to no one."

They parted at one of the corners of the Grande Place, whence Hensdorff hastened away to his lodgings to make preparations to follow Leopold. He was not quite sure whether he could believe the spy or not, and before he took any action he intended to make cautious and deliberate enquiries. These enquiries caused a certain, and not inconsiderable, delay. Gabor was hampered by no such troubles.

After looking carefully at his pistol, his money and his horse, the three things of importance in his mind and important in just that order, the Transylvanian mounted, and rode away across the plain of Brabant, in the direction of Germany.

He thought of last night at the Opera, of how he had sat, obscure, ignored, in the back of the theatre, and seen those two men set up like two bedecked images for the adoration of the mob; and it was very satisfactory to Gabor to reflect that he had such power over both of them—that he could pull those two adored idols down, drag off their shining ornaments and trappings in the mud.

That foolish girl, too—she should not be spared. And Gabor licked his lips as he rode across the tank plain. He had fostered a gross passion for Eleonora; he was never fastidious in his desires. That would be the best of all—to enjoy her some day when she was sunk so low that any one might pick her up from the mire into which she had fallen. Yes; he foresaw such a fate for the Princess Eleonora that it might not be so very long before she was glad of the protection even of a man like himself. "Leopold," he thought to himself, "is not the man to be faithful; and if he were, how long will his destiny hold?"

As he tracked Leopold so closely, he found that in Bavaria, his own country, and in Austria, the heart of the empire, he was traveling in disguise, calling himself by a strange name—that of Count Amburg. He had dismissed his retinue and his escort, and left his coach behind. He now at last rode solitary, a single horseman like Gabor himself. "A fools of fools!" smiled Gabor; and the words were like a song upon his lips.

At length he rode to the Emperor's estate of Rosenberg, that stately and luxurious pleasure-house, which Christian had had the insolence to copy in his Chateau of Ottenheim.

It was not often that Gabor went boldly to the front door of any house; but this time he did so, and faced with a sneer the immense and gloomy palace. The vast pile appeared closed, but there were some servants in livery here.

These answered Gabor's summons, and seemed to do so with alarm and agitation.

"The Emperor is here," said Gabor, in a tone of assurance, standing, a black figure against the grey landscape, on the wide, cold marble steps.

And the lackey, not knowing who he might be, and impressed by his keen air of authority, admitted that the Emperor had arrived last night.

"Last night," repeated Gabor; "and may I see His Majesty? It is on business the most pressing. And with a malleous, though unnecessary, flourish, he added: "From Prince Christian—from the headquarters of the Imperial Army."

The lackey could well believe as much; to him, as to his fellow servants, left there in solitary charge of the abandoned pleasure-palace, the sudden appearance of the Emperor had been to the last degree strange and alarming. They had thought of vast defeats, of immense battles lost, to see the Emperor here in the middle of the campaign.

It was as dreadful as it was incredible. Now, staring at this pale, thin man, looking at him with such keen contempt, the valet felt that some disaster had fallen his master, and he stammered out: "His Majesty is not here."

"No?" queried Gabor, softly, under his breath. "No?"

And the valet replied, stupidly: "His Majesty has just gone to Ottenheim."

"And who," he asked, delicately, "is at Ottenheim?" That is Prince Christian's Chateau, and he is at the war.

The valet did not answer; he gazed stupidly at Gabor.

"Will you, Monseigneur, come in and await His Majesty's return?" he asked, being but a raw servant, and un instructed in important duties.

"I will come in," replied Gabor, pleasantly. "And wait, and rest awhile, and then, I think that I, too, will ride to Ottenheim." And as he entered the grey shadows of the long marble corridor, he asked again: "Who is now at Ottenheim?"

"There are the two Princesses and their ladies," said the startled valet. "I know no more than that, Monseigneur!"

"And I think," said Gabor, taking off his cloak, "there is no more than any one need know, eh?"

He refreshed himself with Leopold's wine, Leopold's coffee, lounging upon Leopold's yellow brocade sofa. It gave him pleasure to do this. It was like an artist's final touch to his masterpiece; unnecessary, but delightful.

At last, stretching himself sleekly, and making a last sneering glance at all those stiff, staring portraits on the high walls, Gabor left the Chateau of Rosenberg, and, warmly wrapped in his fur pelisse, took his leisurely way across the grey, desolate park; a deep silence stifled the landscape. There was no living creature in sight—not so much as one solitary bird left from autumn's revelry. Slowly, yet deliberately, Gabor rode towards Ottenheim.

XV

AS Eleonora crossed the long, straight avenue leading to the great gates, she saw a man coming towards her as if he had just entered the domains of Ottenheim; and she paused, wondering who it could be. For it was not one of the garrison, but a man in civilian clothes, and there was no one, save the servants, who wore civilian clothes; and even they were bedecked in liveries. And this man was in black, with a traveller's cloak and a hat without a cockade. (To be continued)

When Muscles HURT

Stiffness Disappears

I am very glad to know about your MUSCLETONE. I purchased a bottle which gave me splendid relief. It has done a wonderful lot of good for me. The stiffness of my muscles and joints has disappeared. I am now continuing its use, as I will cure my neuritis entirely. I do have the greatest of faith that it will cure my neuritis entirely. Your MUSCLETONE is a wonderful remedy, and I am very glad to recommend it. — Mrs. E. McQuirk, High street, Bound Brook, N. J.

Here's good news for everyone who has rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago, neuralgia or any ill or sore muscles and joints. Science has found a new way to end muscular troubles. Just a simple, harmless liquid applied directly to the affected muscle or joint—yet it ends all pain in from 7 to 10 minutes.

MUSCLETONE acts by absorption. Nothing is taken internally. There is nothing to affect stomach or heart. But pain stops completely—almost instantly.

The medical principle behind MUSCLETONE is to neutralize accumulated toxins through the skin and quick restoration of congested tissues. Almost a million people have found relief. All good druggists have MUSCLETONE for $1.00.

Some of his thoughts from his life story "Vagabond Dreams Come True"

"Sad music, or extremely beautiful music combined with beautiful poetry, brings tears very easily to my eyes. beautiful music with a love story or a love picture brings an emptiness, a yearning, and an ache into my heart."

"As I sat among the men in the band, I had to watch other men with beautiful women in their arms, dancing to our music, I had to sit there and see beautiful women returning the ardor of the men with whom they were dancing."

"I have no illusions about myself, and for a time I dreaded personal appearances both on the stage and in the movies, since I realized that there was nothing intriguing or magnetic in my looks."

"I was very, very happy in my junior and senior years at Yale, and the breath-taking girls that I had once admired from a distance were now mine to know and to meet."

"I know that I am far from perfect and that is the reason I do not expect a perfect mate. I have certain ideals and hopes, but I am not hypocritical or too hard to satisfy."

"While a brunette does quicken my heart more than a blonde, yet I have cared deeply for several blondes and still enjoy their company greatly."

"That phrase in the wedding ceremony expresses it best of all, For Better or For Worse. I would like to feel that were every misfortune conceivable to come upon me, the girl I loved would still stay by me and would be loyal through whatever calamity befell me."

"I have been rather tickle all my life and the remarkable thing that surprises those who know me is that in spite of the fact that I do not look romantic I have probably paid attention and given time to more girls than many dark-haired sheiks who look the perfect Romeo."

RUDY VALLEE, the most talked about young man in America, tells the story of his life and experiences in a series of articles under the caption of "Vagabond Dreams Come True,"

NEW YORK GIANTS MAY CAPTURE 1930 PENNANT

By Frank (Buck) O'Neill
(N. Y. Sports Writer)

SAN ANTONIO, Mar. 24.—The New York Giants of 1930 may win the pennant.

They have more than an outside chance of turning the trick. They may finish third, certain breaks being against them. Second place is their probable station for you can't lightly kick the Chicago Cubs down stairs without acknowledging that they are the National League champions. The Giants are certain to finish in the first three, since there are only three powerful ball clubs in the National League—Chicago, New York and Pittsburgh comprising that powerful trio.

The Giants need pitching strength, a second baseman and strong, intelligent outfield. There should be better than ordinary pitching and sharp defense at second base with Marshall installed as the starting keystone.

Unless something happens, bad outfield is going to be costly to the Giants. So far we have seen Giant outfielders throw to the wrong bases, and by doing so actually help the enemy runners, until we wondered whether or not we were observing major league fielders or boys in the Southern League.

McGraw's quest for wise and active patrols would seem to be futile. The probabilities are that Melvin Ott, a great ball player, wise and strong, will be in right; Roush or Fullis will be in center, and Leach or Fullis will be in left. Johnny Mostil may break in as an alternate, relieving Roush when the last named suffers one of his frequent Charley Horses. The writer rather expects to see Fullis win the left field post from Leach. He seems to be faster and more resourceful. Placing Fullis in left, of course, is conditional upon Roush's winning the post in center field.

The giants should be far stronger in the box this year than they were last. They will be stronger in replacements if nowhere else. The five regulars will be as last year, Carl Hubbell, Bill Walker, Larry Benton, Fred Fitzsimmons and Joe Genewich.

The replacements, as the writer sees the situation, will be Ralph Judd, Joe Heving, Ray Lucas, Le Roy Parmelee and Hub Pruett. Jack Scott may find his effectiveness, but up to this time the veteran has shown nothing.

Carl Hubbell and Bill Walker should both have better years than they had last year. Hubbell won 18 games and should repeat; Walker won 14 and should improve.

Fitzsimmons checked in with 15 wins and is a better pitcher than those figures would indicate. Benton and Genewich, both dismal failures in '29, are rated at 15 games each. These hurlers should win about 83 games.

There is no reason pitchers of the ability of Parmelee, Lucas, Judd, Heving and Pruett should not take care of 20 games among them. That would give the Giants 193 ball games, and 193 games might well win the pennant. It would more than put the Cubs to the acid test.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Carroll and family will move shortly from 929 Garden street to Riverview avenue, Edgely.

WASHINGTON AND THE CONSTITUTION

To the Editor of the Public Ledger:
Sir—Appropos to the present-time discussion, may I ask you to find a place for this pertinent admonition from the "Father of Our Country":

The Constitution which at any time exists till changed by an explicit and authentic act by the whole people is sacredly obligatory upon all. The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government. All obstructions to the execution of the laws are destructive of this fundamental principle and are of fatal tendency.

Why so much discussion about the Eighteenth Amendment? It is a part of the Constitution. Let all the people obey the law and trouble will cease. Its violation disrupts society. The energy manifested by many against the amendment would be more commendable if it were in the interest of obedience to the law.

style of furnishings. The wood-work is painted white and the furniture includes Adams Sheraton and Heppelwhite.

In the American gallery is hung a splendid collection of portraits which illustrate the history of American painting. From the beginning of painting in America until the 19th century there are several notable portraits of Washington painted from life. A portrait of Governor Richard Bellingham, of Massachusetts, by Read, 1641, is one of the prized ones in the collection. This is the earliest known portrait painted in America.

Among the most notable of the paintings in the Flemish and Dutch galleries is the one of "St. Francis Receiving the Stigmata," by Jan Van Eyck. This, considered a great work of art, elicits much praise and comments from visitors to the museum.

Another worthy of foremost mention is of Miss Linley (Mrs. Richard Sheridan), by Gainsboro, hung on the wall of the Treaty room.

The magnificent tapestry on the walls of the French room was admired by all; as well as the furniture loaned to the museum by Miss Ella Parsons, a member of a Bucks county family; and chairs that once were a portion of the Reifsnnyder collection.

CLEVELAND DEPENDS UPON FONSECA

By Dan Taylor
(N. Y. Sports Writer)

NEW ORLEANS, La., Mar. 24.—The success or failure of the ball club Roger Peckinpaugh will place upon the field as the American League representative of Cleveland this year, is expected to depend largely on the physical condition of Lew Fonseca, hard-hitting first baseman, who led the American League in batting a year ago and the luck Peck has in locating a major league shortstop from among the five youngsters trying out for that job.

Aside from those two positions Peck will start the 1930 campaign with exactly the same team that came thundering down the home stretch a year ago in third place.

Fonseca may hold the key to the entire situation. He was the most valuable man on the squad last year and big things were expected of him again this season. But Lew was taken ill during the winter with scarlet fever and he did not recuperate as rapidly as expected. Because of his weakened condition he was sent to a desert resort in California to take a series of sun baths and was two weeks late in reporting. He looked to be in robust health when he joined his teammates here but he has not been called upon to exert himself and there still is some doubt as to whether he will be ready to open the season.

Peck has three very likely prospects for first base in the event Fonseca cannot perform, but none of them are expected to come too close to filling Lew's shoes. They are Zeke Bonura formerly with New Orleans, who looks and acts for all the world like Lou Gehrig of the Yankees; Bruce Caldwell, the ex-Yale football star who burned up the Eastern League with his hitting last year and Alex Hooks, a utility fielder purchased from Terre Haute in the Three I League.

There are five youngsters battling for the shortstop berth with Carl Lind, a sensation with the Indians at second base two years ago but who was ill most of last season, the first choice. He has three close rivals in Johnny Goldman, easily the best fielder of the club but a lad who has not shown much ability to hit; Johnny Burnett, a left-handed hitter who clouts fairly well and Ray Gardner, who split the short-stopping honors with Jackie Tavener, now released, for the Indians last year. Tony Piet, the other candidate, is hardly ready yet.

Johnny Hodapp, who flopped at third and first before he finally made good at second base in mid-season last year, is a certainty to start at the key-stone sack and Joe Sewell moved over from short to third last spring, will again guard the hot corner. The catching duties again will be shared by Luke Sewell and Glenn Myatt and the outfield will be made up of Big Falk, in left; Earl Averill in center and Dick Porter in right.

That means, especially if Fonseca is able to play, that Cleveland will present a healthy-hitting team for they will have six men in the line-up every day who can bat better than .300. Fonseca clubbed .369 last year, Averill .330, Porter .329, Hodapp .327, Joe Sewell, .315, and Falk .310.

Among the rookie hurlers are Clint Brown, a tall, husky young fellow who won 21 games for New Orleans last year; Pete Jablonowski, who won 13 and lost 12 games for Columbus in the American Association last year, Milburn Shoffner, who, in his only start last fall for the Indians, shut-out the Washington Senators for eight innings; Mel Harder, a 20-year old youngster; Leslie Barnhart, purchased from Terre Haute in the Three I League and Belve Bean, with New Orleans last year.

The regular pitchers of last year who will be back are Wesley Ferrell, who won 21 games and lost only 19 in his first year in the big League; Willis Hudlin and Ken Holloway, right-handers, and Joe Shaufe and Walter Miller, southpaws.

Spare outfielders are expected to be Eddie Morgan, who batted .318 with the Indians last year; Charley Jamieson, the old reliable and either Johnny Gill, who led the Eastern League in batting last year with a mark of .377 or Bob Seeds, who hit .342 for Kansas in the Western League.

FORTY-NINE DIPLOMAS GIVEN AT FARM SCHOOL

DOYLESTOWN, Mar. 24.—Freedom, earned independence, a personal business which pride will demand be built up and a chance for success if business methods are applied to agriculture, were the rewards held out to graduates of the National Farm School yesterday by Herbert D. Allman, of Philadelphia, president of the school, during a farewell message to forty-nine graduates.

The occasion was the thirty-third annual commencement of the school, located about a mile from here. Hundreds of guests attended the exercises, which were held in the new $60,000 administration and farm mechanics building.

Prominent and cheery among the graduates was David Kaplan, 19, of Bridgeport, Conn., who arrived at the exercises for the purpose of receiving his diploma in person in an ambulance from the Jewish Hospital in Philadelphia.

Three weeks ago the youth had a bone-grating operation performed upon his leg which, it is expected, will cure a leg condition and permit him to walk.

After a consultation the staff of the hospital refused to accept responsibility for the removal of the plucky youth for the twenty-five-mile ride to the school, but his heart was set upon being with his classmates, and finally Mr. Allman himself became bondsman for the patient's safe return.

Kaplan was an honor graduate in poultry husbandry, and the operation, of the most delicate nature, was performed during the examination period three weeks ago.

Not only was the function yesterday the commencement of his active post-school life, but more than that, it was the commencement of a time in which he can positively look forward to walking as other boys, after twelve years' incapacity.

"Love of freedom is the motive which keeps a student a farmer after his graduation," Mr. Allman said. But there are other factors, too, which should make agriculture as a life work an attractive thing, he went on.

"You will be more certain of your returns than you would in a business or professional career. You will have earned independence, whereas your contemporary city brother, the white-collared lad, because of heavy competition, may still be working at his initial job."

During his address Mr. Allman told the graduates that the last report of the Jewish Agricultural Society showed that the Jewish farm population of the country had increased in the last thirty years by 9,000 per cent. to a total of 90,000. He suggested that graduates, before purchasing or locating farms, should get in touch with the society which had a revolving fund through which farm credits are released to those found worthy of assistance.

The graduation address was delivered by Dr. William H. Fineshriber, of Keneseth Israel, Philadelphia. Frank W. Moscovitz was salutatorian, J. Edward Seipp, valedictorian.

Nine States were represented among the forty-nine graduates who received diplomas for the successful completion of a three-year course at the school. Many prizes for scholarships and other feats were awarded at the exercises.
